1. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 1-23 and 35-38 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over either of Chandross et al or Suzuki et al in view of Mikami et al. Either primary reference discloses the basic claimed method of forming a waveguide comprising the instant steps lacking essentially the aspect of fixing optical elements relative to the photodefinable copolymer and sending light through at least one of the elements and the photodefinable material. Mikami et al discloses such in making a waveguide and such would have been an obvious modification to the process of either primary reference to facilitate forming the waveguide. Suzuki et al (see column 6) discloses suitable polymers and monomers and it is submitted that the instant materials used are all well known in the art and obvious material selections dependent on exact optical properties—ie, refractive index—desired. It is further submitted that dependent claims 23 and 36-38 set forth well known and obvious features which one of ordinary skill in the art would have readily incorporated into the method. For instance, mixing materials and degassing them prior to forming a copolymer is quite well known. Controlling the passage of the light so that the monomer does not volatilize would be necessary so that the monomer can be allowed to diffuse as desired. The exact optical element used to pass the light would certainly have been within the skill level of the art as would the aspect of using a mirror to send the light.
